The awards are offered in 48 countries and regions worldwide. Professor Martin Gill, founder of the OSPAs, stated: "We pride ourselves on our values of being independent, ethical, transparent, respectable and credible and that is why many people around the world regard winning an OSPA as the most prestigious accolade to be awarded in the security sector globally."

This year, there are two new developments: the winners of the first nine categories automatically qualify for the first Global OSPAs, which will be presented in 2025. The first-place winner in the "Lifetime Achievement Award" category will be inducted into the Security Hall of Fame.
